3. The Cat-astrophe Agency - Employment Agency for Cats

Are you in need of a furry little menace to add some chaos to the annoying people in your life? Do you want to drive them crazy with the sound of hissing, scratching, and relentless meowing at 3 AM? Well, look no further! At the Catastrophe Agency, we specialize in employing the most mischievous, rebellious, and downright bad cats for your every need. When you want to create a little nuisance for an annoying neighbor, a co-worker, or even a family member — we have the purrfect match for you!

4. Who We Are - About

Welcome to the Cat-astrophe Agency the world's first and only employment service dedicated to cats with bad behavior. We pride ourselves on providing high-quality, professionally disruptive feline services to those who crave a little extra chaos, irritation, and menace in their daily lives.

At the Cat-astrophe Agency, we understand that sometimes, the world just needs a little more trouble. Not all cats are cut from the same cloth — some are born with an innate sense of disruption, a love for mayhem, and a knack for creating just the right amount of nuisance. These are the cats we seek to employ.

Whether you're tired of irritating people in your life, or you've simply run out of ways to annoy them, our team of misfit felines is ready to provide you with a professional level of mischief, designed to test their patience and bring the thrill of the unexpected to their homes, workplaces, or events.

5. Memorial

In Loving Memory of:

Lady Penelope

Founder of The Catastrophe Agency

1947 - 2020

Lady Penelope's journey began in 1985, when, after years of experiencing the relentless antics of her own feline companion, Sir Whiskers, she realized something profound: not all cats are meant to be sweet and calm. Some are meant to disrupt. And so, she took a leap of faith, deciding to turn her passion for unruly felines into a business.

Lady Penelope believed that there was a market for cats who weren't interested in cuddles or naps. She knew there were people out there who deserved the chaos and unpredictability that only a cat with bad behavior could provide. This understanding led to the creation of the Cat-astrophe Agency, the world's first employment service for cats specifically trained to wreak havoc.

A Legacy of Cats, Chaos, and Laughter

Under Lady Penelope's leadership, the Cat-astrophe Agency grew from a small, quirky startup to an international business that placed over 5,000 cats in homes and businesses across the globe. She worked tirelessly to match the right cat to the right customer, always ensuring that each contract was honored with the maximum level of disruption.

6. Research

To support the concept of an employment agency for cats with bad behavior — specifically employed to cause irritation, annoyance, and menace to people who themselves cause irritation and annoyance — it would be valuable to frame the concept within the context of psychological retribution, behavioral therapy, and the use of pets in stress or anger management. Although there may not be direct studies on "cats hired to annoy bad people," there are relevant research areas that can be linked to the idea of using cats with bad behavior as a form of behavioral intervention or psychological correction for those who need it.

Here are three pieces of research that support the concept of using cats with bad behavior as a method of creating mild stress or irritation for individuals who might deserve it:

1. The Psychological Benefits of “Restorative Stress” and Stressor Exposure

Study: "The Role of Acute Stress in Improving Performance and Psychological Resilience" by L. K. Latham, et al. (2015).

Summary:

This research examines the concept of “restorative stress” — the idea that exposure to mild, controlled stressors can improve personal resilience and help individuals process negative emotions. While prolonged or extreme stress is harmful, short bursts of irritation or frustration (when controlled) can lead to improved emotional regulation, self-reflection, and even personal growth. The study suggests that experiencing mild irritants, such as interruptions or challenges that require patience, can actually help individuals who struggle with impulse control or negative behaviors.

2. The Impact of Negative Reinforcement on Behavior Modification

Study: "Reinforcement and Behavior Change: The Role of Positive and Negative Reinforcement in Human Behavior" by J.A. Durlauf (2001).

Summary:

This research explores how both positive and negative reinforcement influence human behavior. Negative reinforcement, when applied effectively, can lead to behavior modification by introducing discomfort or irritation that encourages individuals to alter their actions. The study suggests that people who habitually irritate or annoy others might become more aware of their own behavior if they experience mild but consistent consequences — in this case, the intentional irritation caused by a cat's bad behavior.

3. The "Payback" or "Karma" Effect: How Retributive Justice Alters Behavior

Study: "When is Payback Sweet? The Role of Anticipatory and Retributive Justice in the Regulation of Aggressive Behavior" by J. E. Carlsmith, et al. (2008).

Summary:

This study investigates how the concept of retributive justice — the idea that individuals who cause harm or irritation should experience some form of proportional retaliation — can influence behavior. The research suggests that people who experience retribution for their bad actions (even mild forms of it) are more likely to modify their behavior. This concept ties into the idea of “karma,” where people feel they should “get what’s coming to them” if they’ve been disruptive or unpleasant. The study highlights how experiencing a consequence (such as a disruptive cat) might encourage people to rethink their actions and become more self-aware.

Our Cats

We don't just hire any cats. We look for the worst — the ones who are impossible to train, relentlessly stubborn, and have a gift for causing trouble when you least expect it. These are the cats you won't find at a regular pet adoption center, but they're perfect for anyone who needs a professional source of irritation.

Each cat in our agency is available for hire with a detailed breakdown of their particular skill set, quirks, and level of menace. Check out our Cat Profiles page to meet the team!

Also, possibly a shop with t-shirts and mugs if time allows

How It Works

1. Browse Our Roster: Visit our “Cat Profiles” page to review available cats, read their biographies, and find out which one best suits your needs.
2. Get in Touch: After you've selected your feline troublemaker, fill out our simple contact form or give us a call. We'll discuss your needs, customize a service plan, and ensure you're paired with the perfect cat.
3. Enjoy the Chaos: Once your cat arrives, sit back and prepare for the show. Whether it's scratching, climbing, meowing, or knocking things off counters, your new feline employee will keep your enemies irritated, annoyed and frustrated.
4. Ongoing Support: Need more trouble? We offer additional services to ramp up the chaos, whether it's more time with your current cat or a swap for a cat that is even worse.

10. Services

Our Services

We offer a range of packages, depending on how much mayhem you're looking to inflict:

- Single Day Trouble Package: Perfect for those who just need a brief burst of annoyance.
- Weekly Mayhem Plan: For ongoing chaos needs, let your cat cause disturbances for up to seven days.
- Full Month of Madness: If you're ready for a full-fledged cat-astrophe, this is for you. Expect more mayhem than you ever thought possible!

Also, possibly a shop with t-shirts and mugs if time allows
